SET-2024-PAPER II-Y-30471

Read the following extract and answer the question numbers 66, 67, 68:

... if I cut it [my hand] it will bleed, like a can of cherries. But then the skin that is cut, and the veins that bleed, and the bones that should never be seen, they are all just as alive as the blood that flows. So the tin can business, or vessel of clay, is just bunk.

And that's what you learn, when you're a novelist. And that's what you are very liable not to know, if you're a parson, or a philosopher, or a scientist, or a stupid person. If you're a parson, you talk about souls in heaven. If you're a novelist, you know that paradise is in the palm of your hand, and on the end of your nose, because both are alive; and alive and man alive, which is more than you can say, for certain, of paradise. Paradise is after life, and I for one am not keen on anything that is after life. If you are a philosopher, you talk about infinity, and the pure spirit which knows all things. But if you pick up a novel, you realize immediately that infinity is just a handle to this self-same jug of a body of mine; while as for knowing, if I find my finger in the fire, I know that fire burns with a knowledge so emphatic and vital, it leaves Nirvana merely a conjecture. Oh, yes, my body, me alive, knows, and knows intensely. And as for the sum of all knowledge, it can't be anything more than an accumulation of all the things I know in the body, and you, dear reader, know in the body.

66. Which of the following observations is true about the difference between a philosopher and a novelist in this extract?

- (A) The philosopher speaks about the immediate while the novelist speaks about the eternal things.
- (B) While the philosopher speaks about life in heaven, the novelist speaks about everyday life.
- (C) While the philosopher speaks about the live body, the novelist speaks about the state of Nirvana.
- (D) The philosopher focuses on the body which bleeds, while the novelist always speaks about transcendental things.

67. The author, in the passage, compares the novel to

- (A) the human body
- (B) the metaphysical paradise
- (C) accumulation of spiritual knowledge
- (D) Both (B) and (C)

68. The author compares the novel to a 'tin can business' because

- (A) both of them are favourite objects to consumers.
- (B) novels are sold now-a-days in tin cans.
- (C) both the novel and the tin can have contents which, according to the author, are alive.
